Abstract

Nowadays, as economy becomes global, national economies are caught in the wave of planetary competition. In this context, aside from experts in the field, common people ask ponder about and find different answers to a vital problem: what is the role and future of welfare?, is it destined to disappear or to persist as a dimension of the competitiveness of nations?. Generally the purpose of welfare is to secure the objective of inequality reduction, task reduction, and minimisation of social risks. We are faced with a function of redistribution in which welfare interferes with economic life.
