Abstract

This phenomenon is under control in a well-constructed economy, by accelerating the competition on the capital market and also by assuring a "security net" for those who lose their jobs willingly or unwillingly.

In Romania the perception of unemployment has been catastrophically: the lack of remarkable performance of the Romanian economy for a long time and also the lack of a complete report have provided situations that the reality could not refute: the lack of alternative jobs - the constant degradation of the marketplace, the long-term unemployment or the appearance of situations of social marginalizing. More than that, the lack of the expected social support has driven to despair and even revolt in some cases.

Keywords: competition, process of reorganization, employment, social marginalizing.
