Abstract

The international commercial trade, essentially the export, represents a nation's economic health barometer, being one of the main elements of the economic growth. Unfortunately, for Romania this lever has not represented in the last years the engine of the economic growth. This study is intended to motivate this reality presenting a complete comparative analysis of the Romanian export evolution in the last years. For 2006 the data have been calculated for the first 11 months.

Keywords: international commercial trade, export, performance, external markets.
